

Demand Characteristics

- Any aspect of the experiment that informs subjects about the purpose of the experiment - specifically, the hypothesis being investigated.
- The fear is that subjects will act to try to confirm the hypothesis. The assumption is that subjects try to be cooperative.
- Researchers may therefore try to disguise the purpose of the experiment, or study subjects in such a way that they are not aware that their behavior is being measured.